

Declaration on the European Directives RoHs
(Directive 2002/95/EC dated 27.01.2003) and
WEEE (Directive 2002/96/EC dated 27.01.2003)

The above mentioned directives refer to the disposal and prevention of hazardous substances in electric and electronic devices. Our company operates on a worldwide scale and considers the protection of the environment and of the natural resources as a corporate commitment. As manufacturer of such devices Okin therefore aims at fulfilling these requirements:

Statement of conformity:

1. Okin has dealt with the WEEE directive already at an early stage in the context of the internal OKIN environment management on the occasion of the ISO certification 14001 (Directive on Waste of Electric and Electronic Equipment). The paramount aim of the directive is the prevention and reduction of electric and electronic waste as well as their re-use, recycling and disposal. Since 13.08.2005 the corresponding products of our company have been registered at the official authorities and marked with the compulsory crossed-out waste bin . The basic requirements of this directive are fulfilled.
2. The RoHs directive (Restriction of the Use of certain Hazardous Substances) concerns the individual electric and electronic component groups of the Okin products at a larger scale. From 01.07.2006 this directive rules the concentration of hazardous substances of lead, mercury, cadmium, hexavalent chromium and bromine flame retardants for electric and electronic devices that have lately been introduced into the market. Together with our pre-suppliers all essential components of the Okin products have been checked and continuously adapted to the requirements of the RoHs directive. All required Okin products will comply with the requirements of the RoHs directive on the appointed date 01 July 2006.

We hereby confirm that the Okin products as well as their components are in compliance with the legal requirements.
